But very disappointed that the film also received an 18.n rating. But the problem is that between the scenes of violence and drug scenes should never be allowed. In a study by Dr. Francis Brune of the University of Toulouse Nuyten, which he conducted among 2,000 Canadian teenagers, there was a large difference in the number of cases of drug use after watching horror films compared with watching action films. Most representatives of the opposite camp agreed that that the violence present there does not change the perception of these scenes, and also does not improve their memory or mental health. "It also indicates that those who can recall scenes of violence can easily recall them," he says. "While such films are presented under the guise of art, their impact really far exceeds the effect of them emotionally." Dr. Brune suggests that watching horror films in itself does not have a negative effect on the emotional state, but if one of the sexual acts occurs in the process of watching, then the effect can be much greater. "Some of my clients who watch these films with friends try not to drink alcohol before a date, and I warn them: "If at some point in the film you feel physically ill, then you can return to the hall and continue watching alone", - he says. Dr. Brune, who is currently studying the effects of horror films on mental health, believes that adolescents who have watched these films several times develop an obsessive state self-blame that prevents them from experiencing more positive emotions. "Teens usually do not consider themselves guilty if they do not have a connection with characters in these films, and they are not ready to believe that their own problems are caused by events from the movies," he says. Sabina Pentland and others Take a look at the new generation of people... For some of them the evil they see in films, stems directly from technology. Young people who are called Sabines Pentlands, believe that the technological revolution threatens their life. Last year, Sabina and her teenage friends saw a film that won a Golden crown" for positive feedback, and after that their lives changed dramatically. Sabina began do n
