A: I'm fairly sure the compatibility for editing saves still needs some work. The last release was in 2011 and was for PC only. You can follow the progress of the development progress by looking at:

Google Groups discussion from 2011 DeviantArt For many people, the sharing economy is just something that happens, and that something is the use of tools and resources that are available over the internet. There's a world in which our cars are rented, our homes are rented, our furniture is rented, even our clothes. And that's a world in which most people would not be faulted for knowing how to function. You can probably look around your house and see this working. There's a social component to this as well. You might feel like you're just getting access to something that has been rented out. That's part of what's keeping people coming back. By and large, people aren't changing their lifestyles to adopt the sharing economy. They're already sharing something that they have, or are using something that they already have. In this world, there's a lot of complexity. I think one of the things that I find interesting is that the sharing economy is sort of like the tip of the iceberg. There are all kinds of other things that are going to be enabled by the internet. The types of things that are enabled by the internet are of a scale that are too large to do by hand. I'm thinking about things like logistics and manufacturing. I'm thinking about things like music. All kinds of things we use on a day-to-day basis are going to be enabled by the internet. In the next couple of years, there's going to be a massive disruption of how we live. We're going to be working in new ways, and we're going to be interacting differently. There are lots of ways of thinking about what that's going to mean, and I think one of the things that's important is that it's not going to be a case where we adopt a new lifestyle. We're going to merge our lifestyles with the new way of working. As sharing becomes an embedded component of how we live, then we're going to use that sharing to help us create art and music and have new ways of relating. I'm not 82138339de
