CSF-pressure was measured by the method of Jensen et al (1972) in 30 patients with various diseases of the central nervous system, and the results compared with measurements performed on a larger series of patients with head injury and on 26 normal subjects. The method is relatively simple, quick and non-traumatic and is suitable for routine clinical use. The site of the lumbar puncture does not determine the pressure measured. The pressure is lowered in patients with multiple sclerosis, in some cases, to a degree which is a relevant diagnostic criterion. The only disease group with increased pressure is that of children with tumors of the posterior fossa. The results are discussed in terms of the method's advantages and disadvantages and the data obtained are compared with those of other published measurements. Not seeing names checked (as in she already has a doll) won't mean anything. It can be added that you need something else to do while in-progress, like sleeping, cooking or while you play [read; MoP doesn't make it impossible if other way is not enough]. If you know the name of the priest, but not the player, could you try adding a comment next to the question "do you know who has it?" (or whatever)? Depending on what's said in response, you can edit in the name yourself? She's not sleeping either, because she plays a Night Elf. And she said that she had a friend who was no longer able to play, but refused to say any more. So she may not know the name, but knows she has a friend who isn't able to play. "One day, Po humbly pointed out to the Emperor that if he ordered all his people to jump into a well, there'd be some that'd be left over at the bottom." -- "The Unofficial Handbook of Heroes" The thing is, I feel like after 8 seconds of no one wanting to answer, it's best if the question is unanswered. It's a good thing the question
