"Sweeper" is a first-person psychological thriller set in Russia during the end of the 90s. In the game, you play as a desperate man who has a criminal past and is desperate to pull off a complex plan. In order to do that, he has to take advantage of an opportunity that he can't afford to miss. You will have to use your detective skills to find clues, complete the missions and solve the cases. To succeed, you will have to make the right decisions and improvise, learn new things and solve your problems. If you like detective stories and choose to play as a badass, fighting like a madman, you will get a lot of satisfaction. If you are more into solving puzzles, then you will appreciate the originality and the storyline that you will discover along the way. Observed around the middle of January in the Gregorian calendar, its calendar date changes annually with the middle day of January, because the date of the new year does not count as a leap year. Since 1948, DORA has been managed by the Wireless Museum at Kingston upon Thames, London, a non-profit organisation dedicated to amateur radio. 2018 date The observance of this day, known as the International Day of Radio Amateur, is therefore determined by the Gregorian date of January 15, 2018. It is the 24th such event, which is the last of the 12 division days and the last day of the 7th AMS Region 34 EUDORA meeting in 2018. Previous years The first "International Day of Radio Amateur" was in 1947. In 1948 the journal CW World (ISSN 0093-1736) reported the first official observance. In 1949 CW Senator (UK) reported a possibility that amateur radio might be on the international

What's new in Classic Card Game Spades:

Security Who Wants to Be a Seed Distributor? #01 In Nellore, a nondescript town in the Indian state of Andhra Pradesh, sits a movie theatre. Inside, dozens of seed-salespersons and their customers—mostly farmers or farmers' families—sit on chairs or on the floor. Some are waiting to watch the movie, interrupting their debate on seed distribution to come and watch it. Some have come with a kid, or maybe with an old grandparent, hoping the kid will connect with his heritage. And others like Kishore just want to hang out. They're all waiting for the toddler to fall asleep. The movie is India's answer to the original Minecraft. It's about Minecraft, but in this version, farmers come up with these ideas and work on it, and then they get to see the fruits of their labour. It's a partnership between Mumbai-based Seedananda Anusandhana Samiti (SAS), a non-profit organisation, and Action Aid USA, another non-profit, based in New York. It was created by a farmer named Christaleje Pedditha Ramaiah, after he watched a Seed

Videos message about a new game called Minecraft and downloaded the game from it. (Not long ago, he also learnt that the game has touched people's hearts all over the world. He received a congratulatory message from Minecraft's lead developer, Markus "Notch" Persson, one day after his first game earned more than 100 million in revenues.) The 12-minute video shows a handful of farmers innovating with some simple tech tools to cope with the problems they face in growing food. The game lets you build and play with plants: they grow upwards and they die if they become submerged under water. The game uses a very basic graphics tool. What makes it different from the games favoured by kids these days is the game is not about killing or destroying, but growing and helping people. Till now, the game only runs on PC, but now, it's getting an Android version too. "I wanted to make a game that would cheer the farmers, bring them together, and create and play around them," says Notch. "And now, my game has reached one million people!" His praise is directed to SAS, a
