In particular, Patent Document 1 proposes a functional film including a multilayer structure mainly comprising polyolefin and a block copolymer having both a hydrophobic moiety and a hydrophilic moiety. Patent Document 1 also proposes a method for providing a hydrophobic polyolefin layer by polymerizing a monomer having at least one ethylene unit or propylene unit at the end of a molecule thereof (hereinafter sometimes simply referred to as a "terminated ethylene" or "terminated propylene") by radiation-polymerizing on the surface of a glass plate. Patent Document 2 proposes a functional film formed by applying a coating composition containing a polyethylene having an ethylene terminus ("terminated polyethylene") and an ethylene/propylene block copolymer, on a glass plate surface.Shape- and stereochemistry-controlled fabrication of porphyrin-catalyzed nanowires with controllable dimensions. In addition, phospholipids are also commonly used as water treatment agents. In some applications, phospholipids are added to soil as a fertilizer. The phospholipids are bonded to the soil and thereby, increase the availability of nutrients which are trapped in the soil during time and provide a source for nutrients. In addition, because the phospholipids are typically formed from waste products, they are generally non-toxic and thus, are environmentally acceptable. Phospholipids are used in several applications including food processing, food and nutrition, pharmaceuticals, water treatment and cosmetics. All of these applications
