Zeynel Dinler Kpss Iktisat Kpss[Prevalence of hypertension, physical activity and overweight among school-aged children in Warsaw]. Prevalence of hypertension and overweight is increasing among preschool and school-aged children. Epidemiological studies and research on physical activity and physical fitness have not been undertaken as yet in Poland. The aim of this study was to determine the prevalence of hypertension and overweight among the school-aged children in Poland. School-aged children (6-15 years old) of Warsaw County, in December 1999, were examined. In order to determine hypertension and overweight, a total of 562 children (309 girls and 253 boys) were examined. Blood pressure was measured according to the recommendations of the International Society of Hypertension; height, weight and body mass index (BMI) were measured. Physical examination included determination of BMI, development of self-assessment of physical fitness, a questionnaire on current physical activity, and a test on body mass. In total, the prevalence of hypertension was 19.9% (n = 105), the prevalence of overweight was 18.4% (n = 97). Girls were more frequently hypertensive than boys, while boys were more frequently overweight. In both groups overweight was mostly mild. Hypertensive girls and overweight boys were found to spend longer time watching television and playing computer games compared to healthy subjects. Physical fitness in overweight boys was significantly poorer than in healthy ones. There was a significant correlation between the incidence of overweight, hypertension and impaired physical fitness among boys. In girls, the incidence of overweight was found to be significantly correlated with both physical fitness and the incidence of hypertension. The prevalence of hypertension and overweight is growing in our country. In school-aged children both overweight and hypertension are associated with less physical fitness and increased time spent watching television and playing computer games.Q: Operator overloading

A: dw The Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA), which oversees government-chartered housing giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, has issued a proposed rule that would make sure their profits don't exceed shareholder equity, according to the Journal. The rule would require the companies to apply a "capital charge" of around 15 percent on their holdings of mortgage-backed securities (MBS) that allow borrowers to roll over their loans and put extra money toward interest payments. In the proposal, the FHFA said its goal is to ensure the two mortgage giants "do not have an incentive to increase earnings through improved returns on their MBS holdings," according to the Journal. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have seen profits continue to climb as the housing market continues to recover, and some Republicans have said that the agencies' profits are draining too much money from the Treasury to help homeowners and encourage mortgage lending. Fannie Mae's net income in 2016 was up 67 percent from the year before and its pretax profits in the first nine months of this year totaled $2.7 billion, up 48 percent from the previous year. However, its "capital charge" is also under pressure — investors have long worried about how the government-regulated companies could be "put at risk by increasing returns on its mortgage holdings without changing its capitalization requirements," the Journal says. Fannie Mae is basically a taxpayer-owned corporation, while Freddie Mac is a government-sponsored company run like a private corporation but receiving federal funds for losses on its MBS holdings. The two agencies accounted for about one-quarter of all U.S. mortgage originations during the housing boom, and have continued to play a major role in the market as it continues 648931e174

The video retailer failed to recover from a wave of speculation it would go into administration on Monday. It has not responded to the BBC's request for a comment. Before going bust HMV was one of the UK's most beloved consumer brands, but it faced a prolonged decline that has led to the closure of 700 stores. "Because of this, HMV's value is significantly lower than the available estimates," the statement said. The company also said it was undergoing a process of change "and will be offering only a fraction of the products and services it did in the past". It would not say when it expects
